

WILLIAM J. HUGHES CENTER FOR PUBLIC POLICY

THE RICHARD STOCKTON COLLEGE OF NEW JERSEY

APRIL 2012

MESSAGE FROM THE DIRECTOR

The first quarter of 2012 has proven to be a busy and productive time at the Hughes Center.

Of special note is the 2012 Energy Symposium, which featured Lisa Jackson, the Administrator of the United States Environmental Protection Agency (US EPA). This newsletter reviews the Symposium's highlights. We also asked participants to evaluate some of the elements of the event. It was well-received across all areas. On the key question – "Would you recommend future Hughes Center events?" – all of the respondents said "Yes."

We continue our Spotlight on Steering Committee members, working our way alphabetically, with Noah Bronkesh and Fred Butler. We also continue our features on our Washington Interns – a special group of students who put their Stockton classroom experience to the test in our nation's capital.

For those of you in more immediate need for news about the Hughes Center, please "follow" us on Twitter and "like" us on Facebook. The Hughes Center website will also be going through a major revision over the next month or so. All of the links for these three outlets are available on the last page of the newsletter.

2012 ENERGY SYMPOSIUM

President Saatkamp speaks with EPA Administrator Jackson

Nearly 300 energy industry leaders, activists, and academics participated in the Hughes Center's successful 2012 Energy Symposium, which brought U.S. EPA Administrator Lisa Jackson to the campus as the keynote speaker.

The Feb. 22 event, which also drew Stockton College students and members of the public, explored issues related to the energy industry and energy consumption in New Jersey through a daylong series of panel discussions.

Administrator Jackson told attendees in a morning speech that renewable energy can create jobs that would contribute significantly to economic growth.

YOUTH VOTING PRESENTATION

More than 50 students and faculty members gathered on Super Tuesday, March 6, for a Hughes Center presentation on youth voting trends and the Republican presidential primaries.

David Carr

Professor of Political Science David Carr, a Senior Fellow at the Hughes Center, coordinated a presentation on the presidential voting patterns of young voters by Dr. James “Mac” Avery, Associate Professor of Political Science.

Dr. Avery used graphs and data to explore trends since 18-year-olds received the right to vote in 1971, and discussed reasons why youth voting levels have traditionally been lower than those of older voters.

Afterward, Dr. Carr and John Froomjian, Research Associate at the Hughes Center, led a student discussion about the Republican presidential primaries before results of the Super Tuesday elections started coming in.

Daniel J. Douglas, Director of the Hughes Center, said the session demonstrated the center’s commitment to civic and political engagement.

Faculty members who attended the presentation included:

Associate Professor of Political Science Michael Rodriguez, Professor of Political Science Alan Arcuri, Director of Research and Policy Analysis for the Hughes Center; Distinguished Professor of Political Science William Daly; Professor of Political Science Linda Jassel; Associate Professor of Spanish Arnaldo Cordero-Romero; and Associate Professor of Business Studies Michael Busler, a Fellow of the Hughes Center.

The deadline to register to vote is 21 days before an election. The deadline for New Jersey’s June 5 presidential primary will be May 15. For information on how to register, including specific information for college students, visit:

SCOUTING AWARDS FOR HUGHES CENTER LEADERS

Sharon Schulman

Sharon Schulman, Special Assistant to the President for External Affairs, has been named one of five 2012 Women of Distinction by the Girl Scouts of Central & Southern New Jersey. Ms. Schulman is the Founding Executive Director of the Hughes Center.

The Women of Distinction Awards honor outstanding local women whose professional accomplishments make them positive role models who can inspire girls.

Ms. Schulman, who is a former Brownie and Girl Scout, will be matched as an award winner with a young woman to mentor. She attended the Girl Scout Leadership Summit on the Stockton campus on the 17th of March, the month that marked the 100th anniversary of Girl Scouts of the USA.

Ms. Schulman has held positions as Chief of Staff and C.E.O at the N.J. Board of Regulatory Commissioners and as Executive Director of the 1st Legislative District offices for former state Assemblyman Edward H. Salmon. She also served as President and CEO of Aqua New Jersey, Inc.

“What I remember was the good times and camaraderie. The badges made us focused and goal-oriented,” Schulman said of her scouting experience. “And I remember selling cookies.”

According to Girl Scouts of the USA, 68 percent of women in Congress, 80 percent of women executives, and 93 percent of female astronauts once were in scouting.

Ed Salmon

The Jersey Shore Council Boy Scouts of America will honor Dr. Edward H. Salmon, chairman of the Hughes Center Steering Committee, as their 2012 Atlantic County Distinguished Citizen.

Dr. Salmon, Chairman of Salmon Ventures and Board President of the Next Generation Aviation and Technology Research Park, will receive the award at a dinner on May 10 at Stockton College’s Seaview Resort.

The Atlantic County Distinguished Citizen Award has been presented annually by the Jersey Shore Council Scouts since 1994. The award is presented to a member of the community for his or her years of service and dedication to the people of Atlantic County, especially to youth.

Council officials said they chose Dr. Salmon because of his longtime service to the region as a parent, coach, teacher, and elected official who served in the state Assembly. Dr. Salmon was a physical education teacher in the Millville school system. He also served as president of the N.J. Board of Public Utilities.

“He has been involved in scouting in many different ways throughout South Jersey, and is truly an example of how to live the Scout Oath and Law for our young people,” said Council spokesman Christopher Street.

The Jersey Shore Council BSA serves more than 11,000 youths in Atlantic, Cape May, Ocean, and Burlington counties.

For information on the awards dinner, please call: 732.349.1037, ext. 22.

Sharon Schulman interviews Lisa Jackson

Executive Director Sharon Schulman, she said the green economy will influence four areas identified by President Barack Obama as driving growth: manufacturing, worker education and training, a return to American values, and a new era of American energy production and innovation.

“An economy built around the new challenge of going farther on a smaller tank of gas is an example of how a good investment in the economy can be a pillar of future growth,” said Administrator Jackson, a former commissioner of the N.J. Department of Environmental Protection.

Among the most popular symposium sessions was an instant polling exercise that found support for alternative energy development and for strong protection of the environment.

Dr. Patrick Hossay, a Stockton Associate Professor of Sustainability, used clicker technology to instantly gauge opinion on energy-related issues among attendees. Using hand-held “clickers” – small electronic devices that resemble remote controls – attendees chose responses to questions projected onto a screen, and a computer tallied the responses. Majorities of attendees favored alternative energies over fossil fuels; expressed belief in the existence of global warming caused by human activities; and placed a high value on environmental protection. Wind and solar power were the top choices when attendees picked their preferred energy sources.

Dr. Hossay, who heads Stockton’s new BA and BS degree programs in Sustainability, noted that symposium participants included industry leaders and environmental activists with differing views.

“The Hughes Center should be praised for bringing together people who typically don’t sit in the same room, and for starting a conversation,” he said.

Other panel discussions explored issues related to the energy industry and energy consumption in New Jersey.

Chris Wissemann, CEO of Fishermen’s Energy, sparked strong interest from attendees with an outline of the company’s plans to build a wind farm 2.8 miles off the coast of Atlantic City. Wissemann predicted the costs of offshore wind energy will decrease over time once infrastructure is built to allow for expansion.

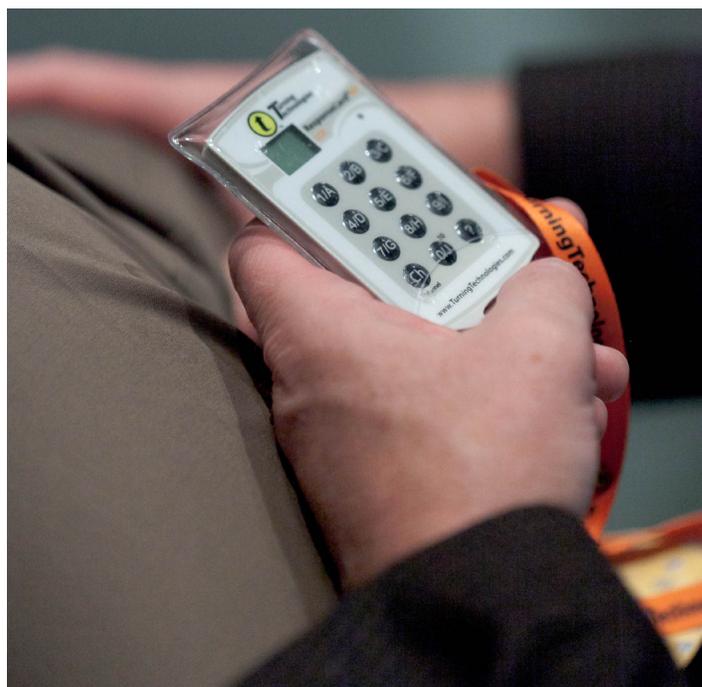

Wissemann said Fishermen’s Energy hopes to begin construction in 2013.

Lively breakout sessions explored the issues of nuclear energy and hydraulic fracturing, or fracking. Jamie Mallon of PSEG and David Pringle of the N.J. Environmental Federation offered alternative viewpoints on “The Future of Nuclear Energy.” The fracking panel included James Benton, executive director of the N.J. Petroleum Council; Jim Walsh, Eastern regional director of the Food and Water Watch; and Zoltan Szabo of the U.S. Geological Survey.

Other speakers and presenters included:

- Dr. Dennis Weiss, Dean of the School of Natural Sciences and Mathematics
- Denise Foster, Vice President of State and Member Services, PJM
- Karen Alexander, CEO and President of the N.J. Utilities Association, the afternoon keynote speaker
- Donald Moore, Associate Vice President of Stockton College
- David Thomas Osborn, Vice President of CorAdvisers
- Derek M. Johnson, Director of East Coast Operations for Building IQ
- Dr. Michael Rodriguez, Director of Research and Policy Analysis at the Hughes Center
- Michael Fischette, CEO, Concord Engineering
- Ben Parvey, CEO, Blue Sky Power
- Jeff Weissman, MCFA Planning
- Frederick Butler, Executive Vice President, Salmon Ventures.

RESEARCH PAPERS

The Hughes Center is publishing research papers authored by two faculty members associated with the center, Drs. David Carr and Michael Rodriguez.

The papers explore topical and important issues: spending by independent authorities in New Jersey; and the impact of changing federal immigration policy on businesses in the Garden State. The Hughes Center is publishing both papers this month.

David Carr

Dr. Carr's paper, Public Authorities in Governing New Jersey, sheds light on the Byzantine finances of hundreds of independent authorities – sometimes called the “shadow government” – operating in this state.

Political Science Professor Carr, a senior fellow at the Hughes Center and former Provost of the College, finds a fragmented system of financial reporting and oversight that frustrates efforts to see the big picture in how much public money is being spent or borrowed by authorities.

Dr. Carr notes admirable efforts by the Christie Administration to bolster transparency in authority finance. But he finds no central government oversight or reporting structure for public agencies responsible for billions of dollars.

Writing from the perspective of the average citizen, Dr. Carr also explains the role of independent authorities and how they came to be.

“Public authorities remain shadow governments,” Dr. Carr said. “The effort necessary to acquire even rudimentary information goes far beyond what one would expect from an active and engaged citizen.”

Dr. Rodriguez, an Associate Professor of Political Science and Director of Research and Policy Analysis at the Hughes Center, has published Immigration Policy: Understanding the Impact of a Changing Policy Environment on Local Businesses.

His work spells out why business owners need to become more familiar with federal immigration policy that has been heavily influenced by national security considerations after the 9/11 terrorist attacks.

Demographic analysis shows that the issue is important to multicultural New Jersey, one of six states considered “gateways” through which most immigrants enter the United States. New Jersey ranks sixth in terms of the size of its foreign-born population.

The research paper notes that private-sector hiring practices are being subject to more intense scrutiny, and reporting requirements for worker eligibility have been tightened with more sophisticated digital reporting systems, such as E-Verify.

Dr. Rodriguez reports that familiarity with these requirements and compliance could save businesses the difficulty of being audited.

“Businesses should be aware that since immigration policy has come under the Department of Homeland Security, the federal government has greater resources and technical ability to check on the hiring of unauthorized workers,” Dr. Rodriguez said.

“A key change has been a shift of the burden of civil and criminal liabilities from the employee to the employer,” he said.

In addition, his paper outlines the potential impact on businesses as local police entities take on regulation of criminal activity related to immigration.

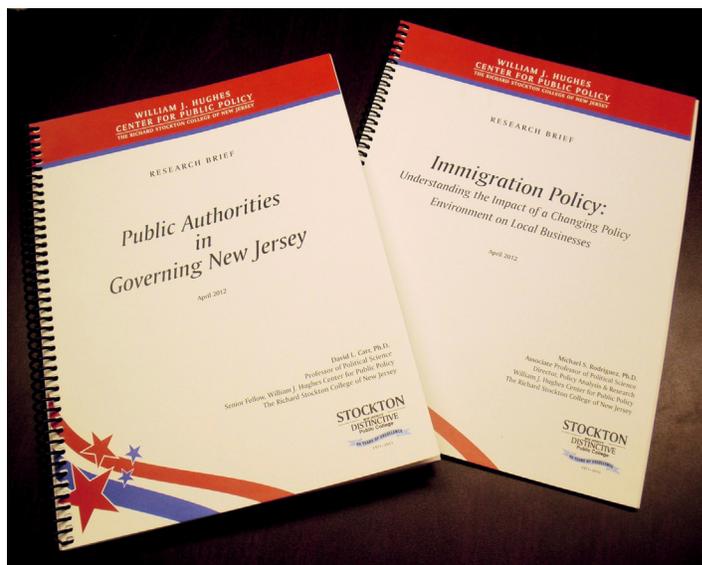

Dr. Rodriguez presented “Why Immigration Matters in the 2012 Presidential Election” during Stockton’s Day of Scholarship on March 22. He is also giving a presentation on the growth of state laws targeting immigration and on “reverse pre-emption” at a Midwest Political Science Association Meeting in Chicago on April 13.

CHANGES AT THE HUGHES CENTER

Dr. Darryl G. Greer, longtime chief executive officer of the New Jersey Association of State Colleges and Universities (NJASCU), joined the Hughes Center in January as a Senior Fellow.

In this new position, Dr. Greer will draw from more than three decades of higher education advocacy experience and help to establish the Higher Education Strategic Information and Governance (HESIG) Center at The Richard Stockton College of New Jersey. HESIG's mission will be to articulate and advance issues of critical importance to higher education and the public trust.

Dr. Greer is a nationally recognized expert in higher education policy matters and a statewide leader who is well known in the New Jersey Statehouse. He headed NJASCU, which represents the state's nine public colleges and universities, including Stockton, since its establishment in 1985.

The HESIG is charged with developing best practices in higher education accountability, cost effectiveness, and accessibility. It will serve as a resource to journalists, researchers, and policymakers.

Corrine Wilsey has been hired full-time as a clerk typist by the Hughes Center.

She had been working for the center part-time since August. In addition to her regular office duties, Corrine is now assisting Director Daniel Douglas with events such as the 2012 Energy Symposium and is providing support for Dr. Darryl Greer, a Senior Fellow with the Hughes Center.

Corrine graduated from Stockton cum laude in 2010 with a BS degree in Psychology and a BA degree in Criminology with a minor in Chemistry. She is pursuing a Masters degree in Criminal Justice at Stockton.

RECYCLING SYMPOSIUM

Former Governor Thomas Kean will be the keynote speaker at an April 24 symposium cosponsored by the Hughes Center to celebrate 25 years of New Jersey's mandatory recycling law.

Panel discussions about the state of recycling and new technologies will be held throughout the event, cosponsored on the Stockton campus by the Atlantic County Utilities Authority and the N.J. Department of Environmental Protection.

Governor Kean, who signed the recycling mandate into law, is scheduled to speak at 6:30 p.m. following a 5:15 p.m. reception. Former State Sen. William Gormley will introduce Governor Kean.

Assistant DEP Commissioner Jane Kozinski will welcome attendees in the Campus Center at 1 p.m., and DEP Commissioner Robert Martin will speak.

Confirmed speakers include:

- Robert Anderson, Regional Business Development Manager, ReCommunity
- Isaac Manning, Director of Recycling, Occupational Training Center of Burlington County, Inc.
- Dominic D'Altilio, President, Association of New Jersey Recyclers

- Jerry Powell, on the national perspective
- Organic Diversion, Rocco D'Antonio
- Gary Sondermeyer, Bayshore Recycling
- Mary Sheil, former administrator of DEP's Office of Recycling
- Ron Riskie, Mayor of Woodbury (first recycling program in New Jersey)
- Penny Jones, Morris County MUA
- and Chasing Arrows creator Gary Anderson.

Optional tours of Stockton College's recycling program will be available.

The cost is $55 per person and includes access to all symposium sessions and an informal dinner/reception. Stockton students, faculty and staff may attend free of charge.

To register, visit the Hughes Center website at: www.stockton.edu/hughescenter.

The symposium will take place two days after the ACUA holds its 22nd annual Earth Day celebration on April 22, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. at its Haneman Environmental Park, 6700 Delilah Road, Egg Harbor Township. Workshops for all ages and wind farm tours will be available.

STEERING COMMITTEE SPOTLIGHT

Noah Bronkesh

Noah Bronkesh is an attorney who has represented southern New Jersey businesses, government agencies, and developers of everything from housing and shopping centers to Atlantic City casino hotels.

Mr. Bronkesh, a Linwood resident, joined the New Jersey Bar in 1973, and was admitted to practice before the U.S. Supreme Court in 1980. He was admitted to the New York Bar five years later.

His areas of legal expertise include commercial real estate, land use, commercial law, chancery litigation, and gaming law.

He joined the Millville law firm of Okoniewski, DiStefano, Bronkesh and Daniels in 1973, and was a member from 1975 to 1980. Mr. Bronkesh became an associate of the Sills, Cummins and Gross law firm, with offices in Newark and Atlantic City, in 1980, and served as a member from 1982 to 2009.

In 2009, Mr. Bronkesh became a partner of Hill Wallack in its Atlantic City office, and served of counsel in 2011 until January.

Mr. Bronkesh remains active in a number of organizations in addition to serving on the Hughes Center Steering Committee. He is a trustee of the Southern New Jersey Development Council and a member of the International Association of Gaming Attorneys, of the American Bar Association Committee on Gaming Law, and of the Greater Atlantic City Chamber.

A member of Congregation Beth Judah in Ventnor, Mr. Bronkesh served on the New Jersey Israel Commission from 1991 to 2010 and was Past President of the Jewish Federation of Atlantic and Cape May counties.

Mr. Bronkesh has served on judicial advisory committees for U.S. Sens. Frank Lautenberg, Jon Corzine, and Bill Bradley. He has also chaired the Atlantic County Democratic Organization.

Frederick F. Butler

Frederick F. Butler brings 33 years of experience in government and energy industry regulation to his role as utility regulation consultant and Executive Vice President of the consulting firm of Salmon Ventures Ltd.

Before joining the Millville-based firm, Mr. Butler served for 11 years as a commissioner of the N.J. Board of Public Utilities. There, his role was to regulate the state's electric, natural gas, telecommunications, investor-owned water and cable television industries.

He has been active in the National Association of Regulatory Utility Commissioners (NARUC), where he served in top leadership roles, including President. Mr. Butler has advised utility research centers at universities in Michigan, New Mexico and Florida.

He has also been active in the National Regulatory Research Institute and in the Mid-Atlantic Conference of Regulatory Utility Commissioners, where he served as Secretary-Treasurer and President.

Mr. Butler is recognized as an international expert in regulatory affairs. He has consulted in Africa, Asia, and Europe. He served on the Presidium of the Eastern European and Eurasian Regulatory Association and chaired international water and climate change committees for NARUC, representing the group at the United Nations.

As a result of his national and international experience, Mr. Butler is in great demand throughout the United States and Western Europe, Latin America, Asia, and Africa. He does virtually none of his current work in New Jersey.

Earlier in his career, Mr. Butler served as Executive Director of the state Assembly Democratic Office and deputy director of the N.J. Commission on Capital Budgeting and Planning.

He received a Bachelor's Degree in Modern Languages and Political Science from Villanova University. He received a Master's Degree in International Relations from Johns Hopkins University School of Advanced International Studies, and completed his qualifying exams in the PH.D program in political science at Rutgers University in New Brunswick. Mr. Butler is fluent in French, Spanish, and Italian.

WASHINGTON INTERNSHIP PROGRAM

The Washington Internship Program in the Hughes Center is one of the most successful internship programs in the country. Students are placed in positions in the nation's capital for a semester. Stockton College has the largest contingent of students in the country with placements through the nationally acclaimed Washington Center for Internships and Academic Seminars. The college's participation in the program is overseen by Dr. Michael Rodriguez, Director of Research and Policy Analysis at the Hughes Center and an Associate Professor of Political Science. This issue features two program graduates who now work at Stockton College.

Jaime Muratore, 28, graduated from Stockton with a business marketing degree in 2006. She is now Director of Corporate Marketing and Sponsor Development for the Hero Campaign for Designated Drivers, which is based in the new L-wing offices.

Jaime landed a rare paid internship in 2003 with Market Connections, a Fairfax, VA market research company, gaining on-the-job training that's not possible in a classroom setting. Despite having studied marketing only minimally as a sophomore, she did so well in her market research projects that the company offered her a permanent job.

She declined it to finish college. But Jaime believes the experience in the program prepared her for the business world. She also enjoyed staying in the Washington area – her first time living away from home – and visiting Capitol Hill.

"My advice is to go into an internship. It's the only way to get a feel for the real world. And this program is one of the best. I think there was a strong correlation between my internship and getting my first job."

"At the time, there was a feeling that the Washington Internship Program is only for political science majors. But I was a business major. I did learn about politics there. You get a broad range. But businesses participate in the program, so there are opportunities for many kinds of students."

By participating in the Washington Internship Program during his last semester at Stockton, Steven Radwanski satisfied his strong interest in international affairs. Steven, 29, a 2005 political science graduate, interned at the State Department. There, he compiled intelligence from news clippings provided by U.S. embassies around the world.

Working from 4 a.m. to noon, Steven was able to spend afternoons visiting Washington's museums, institutions, and cultural offerings. The internship also exposed him to official Washington. He and other interns once were able to question then-Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice. While other interns received terse answers to policy questions, Steven asked her to comment about her beloved Cleveland Browns football team. She brightened and talked football at length.

Steven, an Egg Harbor Township resident, is now Associate Director for Residential Life-Operations at Stockton. He said working in a State Department team and learning to navigate a big city prepared him for professional life. He strongly recommends the Washington Internship Program and offers advice to potential participants.

"I would say don't room with people you know. You can meet different people and be exposed to different cultures. I roomed with three people from Puerto Rico, and we still keep in touch today."

"The best advice I received was to wait until your senior year to do it. A lot of the culture and events in Washington include alcohol. I'm not advocating drinking. But if you're not old enough to participate, you will miss out on good experiences."

LEGISLATOR-IN-RESIDENCE

State Sen. Chris Connors, a 9th District Republican, has spent three days on the Stockton College campus this semester as part of the Hughes Center's Legislator-in-Residence Program.

The program is designed to bring New Jersey lawmakers to the college to politically engage students and faculty and to share their legislative experiences.

Under the new state legislative district map, the college and Galloway Township are part of Connors' district.

Sen. Connors is a 1978 graduate of Stockton College.

On Feb. 15, Dr. David Carr, a Hughes Center senior fellow, presented Sen. Connors with findings from his research on public authorities. On Feb. 29, the lawmaker met with Drs. Peter Straub, Professor of Biology, and Jesse Jarvis, Associate Professor of Marine Science, to discuss studies of New Jersey artificial reefs and sea grass in Barnegat Bay. On March 7, he met with Dr. Stewart Farrell, Director of the Coastal Research Center, on erosion and dune maintenance.

He interacted multiple times with students, speaking in political science and environmental issues classes. The senator met with representatives of the Student Senate and various student organizations and with veterans. He also spoke to a group on "How College Students Can Impact the Political Process."

Sen. Connors met with Dr. Herman Saatkamp, the college president, during each of his three visits to the campus.

The senator's chief legislative aide, Jason Smith, a Stockton graduate, accompanied him during his visits.
