POMONA, NJ — Stockton University gave its students a unique learning experience they can carry with them long after they graduate.

On Tuesday, January 23rd, officials with the William J. Hughes Center for Public Policy at Stockton welcomed sitting United States Supreme Court Associate Justice, Neil Gorsuch, to the campus' Performing Arts Center for a special academic initiative for students, faculty and staff.

Gorsuch spoke to those in attendance and answered questions about his experiences and the important role the Supreme Court plays in American history.

Bill Hughes, Jr. asked the questions during the Q&A session. Hughes is a lifelong friend of Justice Gorsuch and son of the namesake of the William J. Hughes Center for Public Policy at Stockton.

Gorsuch took his seat on the Supreme Court last April after being nominated for the position by President Donald Trump.

Stockton University officials say the event was a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity for students to learn from a sitting Supreme Court judge, and they were honored to have him.
